PITTENTURF GETS 5 YEARS

Brannen Sentenced to Penitentiary for Three Years while Tom White Gets Penitentiary Term for Coal Stealing.

James Pittenturf was this morning sentenced in Adams County Court to undergo an imprisonment in the Eastern Penitentiary for a term of not less than five years or more than four years. Joseph Brannen, another of the trio who escaped from jail Christmas night, was given a penitentiary term of not less than three years or more than ten years.

The Court room was crowded with a big audience of interested spectators. Every seat was occupied and scores of persons stood in the aisles. All the other cases were disposed of before the Pittenturf sentence was taken up.

The only thing the prisoner said when he stood before Judge Swope was to answer a question as to his age which he gave as 28 years. The judge told the man that he was a "peril to the good people of this county, a threatening menace to the safety of their property and even of their lives." The Court spoke of the "notorious criminal record" which Pittenturf has in this county and said he hoped that Pittenturf held no feeling of pride for his crimes.

Before imposing sentence Judge Swope told him that he earnestly hoped for his reformation, that the Court did not wish the prisoner to think that no one had faith in him or to think that every hand in Gettysburg was turned against him.

"I know that three persons do not feel this way," said the Court. "The one is Rev. Frank E. Taylor the Presbyterian minister who, with the choir of the church, makes Sabbath evening visits to the jail and holds services there. He believes that you are not beyond reformation and that there is still hope for you. A second person is one of the ladies of that choir to whom you talked and told her that you were truly penitent and that you really regretted your past life and would appear for sentence a penitent and broken hearted man. The third person to whom I refer is the Court who believes you may yet be saved and who trusts that this third sentence may prove to be the charm which will work your reformation."

In the case of larceny from the person—the Hanson B. Hoar case of August Court—Pittenturf was given a term of not less than fifteen months or more than four years; in the aggravated assault and battery and second conviction case—the assault on Sheriff Fissel—he received not less than eighteen months or more than four years; in the burglary case—Peters' warehouse at Guernsey—not less than two years and three months or more than six years. The second sentence starts at the expiration of the minimum sentence of the first and the third sentence starts at the expiration of the minimum sentence of the second. Good behavior will secure Pittenturf's release at the end of five years while had behavior may mean his incarceration for fourteen years.

Joseph Brannen, 24 years old, one of the trio of Christmas night jail breakers, received not less than 15 months or more than four years in the assault and battery and second conviction charge, and not less than eighteen months or more than six years in the statutory burglary charge.

The Court referred to Brannen's apparent pride in his criminal career and said that he believed that deep down in the recesses of Pittenturf's heart could be found more repentance for past misdeeds than in the heart of Brannen. The Court expressed the hope that Brannen's sentence would work his reformation and that he would come from the penitentiary an honest, peaceful and law-abiding citizen.

Bert Hamm, of McSherrystown, found guilty of assault and battery and aggravated assault and battery in the shooting affair on the pike between McSherrystown and Littlestown, on the night of November 16, in which Charles Sponseller was injured, was sentenced to a term of one year in the county jail, the Court referring to appeals from the counsel for the defense and Mrs. Hamm for a year's jail sentence rather than a nine months' penitentiary term.

William McSherry, Esq., appeared before the Court in behalf of Mr. Hamm asking a jail sentence, declaring also that several jurors had stated after the trial that, had they known the prosecutor had been sentenced in Maryland some years ago to a penitentiary term for turkey stealing, they would have been inclined to give less credibility to his testimony and would have been in favor of a "not guilty" verdict. Judge Swope spoke of jurors' inclination to say "pleasant things" following the disposition of a case and that such statements could not be given much weight.

Tom White, guilty of coal stealing,

27 years old, married and a resident of Gettysburg since September 3 when he claims he came from Philadelphia, was given not less than nine months or more than three years in the Eastern Penitentiary.

Lorrie Toulby, guilty of being a tramp, was given his freedom, Judge Swope saying that the prisoner evidently made it a practice of committing some trivial offense so as to get "comfortable quarters" during the winter months. Toulby promised to go to Thurmont where he claimed to have friends. He was placed on parole for a year.

Hattie Tonsil and May Edwards, who pleaded guilty to being public nuisances, were given sentences of ten days in the county jail where they have been imprisoned since January 8. Both promised good behavior in the future. Edward A. Weaver, Esq., appeared to ask mercy for May Edwards.

ON EASTERN TRIP

C. W. Baker, of Santa Rosa, California, has been spending some time in this section. He was born on the old Baker homestead near Abbotstown, and was a son of George H. Baker, late of Abbotstown. His mother died when he was four years old, when his grandfather, Daniel Baker, took him to rear. He was sent to school, and at sixteen years of age he began teaching at the Union schoolhouse above Abbotstown.

Mr. Baker taught school several terms, then went to a business college in Harrisburg, and later embarked in the mercantile business. About 34 years ago he went to Chicago, clerking for a large firm, and at the same time, he took up the study of embalming, then went to Omaha, Nebraska, where he worked for the late John Jacobs. Later Mr. Baker went to San Francisco, California, and 8 years ago to Santa Rosa.

Mr. Baker is past 61 years and is hale and hearty, and never was sick. He never ate meat and drank nothing but water since he was 20 years old. He said "I live on fresh rye bread, grapes, fruit, figs and oranges, and eat but twice daily, at 9 a. m. and 4 p. m."

Mr. Baker expects to leave for his western home on Monday.

STATE PEACH CROP WILL BE VERY SHORT

The greater part of the peach crop has been ruined by the excessive low temperatures of the present winter, according to Economic Zoologist H. A. Surface, who has received reports from all parts of the state.

"In theory the buds of the peach tree are nipped when the mercury gets down below 12," said Prof. Surface. "It got a great deal colder than that in many places and the peaches will suffer. The buds in most cases will bloom but there will appear in the center a small brown spot that will mean there will be no peach. Of course, there are many belts that were not touched for some climatic reasons by the zero weather and there the peaches will be good, but in general the large majority of trees will suffer. The apple and pear trees do not seem to be affected."

"The cold weather has also been severe on bees, too, and many of them have been killed."

CHAMP CLARK FOR THE LINCOLN WAY

Speaker of the House of Representatives Gives Congressman Lafean Assurance that he Favors Great Memorial Highway Plan.

Sentiment for the proposed Lincoln memorial highway to connect the Gettysburg battlefield with the national capital at Washington is growing in a marked degree. Congressman D. F. Lafean, who is promoting the project with the assistance of a number of his colleagues in congress and other admirers of the martyred president, has been assured the hearty co-operation of Hon. Champ Clark, speaker of the national house of representatives.

In a communication to Congressman Lafean, Speaker Clark says that he is in favor of the building of the highway in honor of Lincoln, because he was himself a practical man, and that would be of lasting use and benefit to the people, rather than one only ornamental in character.

MEMORIAL IN WASHINGTON

Since the introduction of the first bill for the highway in congress by Representative Lafean about five years ago, a commission was appointed to recommend to congress plans for the erection of a memorial to the emancipator of the slaves. After considerable investigation, it is stated, the commission decided upon a large monument to be constructed in Washington. The report, however, has not been presented to congress, but it likely will be in the very near future.

The increased interest in the proposed roadway is expected to result in steps being taken at an early date for the preliminary work to be done. It is also suggested that the proposed monument be placed at the Washington terminus of the highway.

The promoters of the highway are meeting with opposition from architects and others, who contend that the construction of the memorial way would establish a bad precedent and be the entering wedge for the establishment of a fixed policy of granting federal appropriations for the building of public highways.

There is said to be a great distortion of the actual facts concerning the proposed construction of the highway by those who take exception to the improvements.

ROADWAY NOT SO EXPENSIVE

It is contended that the roadway with a bituminous macadam surface could be built for $21,000 a mile, or making a total cost of $1,512,000 for the 72 miles. According to the experience of several states a road 24 feet wide could be kept in repair for from $300 to $500 a mile. It is stated that the parking or ornamentation of the roadways would have to be left in the hands of the park departments of Washington and Gettysburg, or either. Large memorial arches should mark the entrance of the road in Washington and the point of connection with the Gettysburg reservation, it is stated, but the matter of elaborate memorials along the memorial way is out of the question.

It is also believed that the right of way for the proposed memorial could be secured at little expense, as existing roads would be utilized largely.

NEW EXPRESS COMPANY

The Adams Express Company's office at Gettysburg will likely give way to the American Express Company some time during the year according to the Baltimore Sun which says:

"Baltimore is to become the southern headquarters of the American Express Company of New York, which is capitalized at $18,000,000 and one of the largest corporations of its kind in the world. It will operate in connection with the Western Maryland Railway Company and its connections, succeeding the Adams Express Company on these lines, and will be ready for business May 1.

"Lewis R. Gwynn, assistant to the vice president and general manager of the company, came here to look over the territory and to arrange for a city office, which will be an auxiliary to general headquarters to be established at the Western Maryland Terminal. It will be the company's first venture into the express field south of New York. An office will be established in Washington within the next few months."

ROTHHAUPT'S MILL BURNED

Rothhaupt's Mill at Natural Dam was completely destroyed by fire between three and four o'clock this morning together with practically all the contents. The loss is partly covered by insurance.

The flames were first discovered by Mrs. Rothhaupt who lives in the house immediately across the road from the mill. From the location of the flames it was evident that the fire had its origin from the stove in the mill room and from there it spread so rapidly that nothing could be gotten out. Neighbors gathered at the place and the other buildings were saved.

Among other things which the place contained was one hundred bushels of wheat which had been received at the mill on Friday and this is a total loss to the tenant, Charles Wenschhof.

TAFT WILL MAKE IMPORTANT TRIP

Leaves Today For New York and Ohio Cities.

IS SUFFERING FROM A COLD

The President Will Make More Than a Dozen Speeches in His Home State and See Many Political Leaders.

Washington, Jan. 27. — President Taft leaves Washington today on a five-day trip that will take him to New York and Cleveland, Columbus and Akron, O., the most important journey in the eyes of many of his friends that he has planned since he got back to the White House from the west.

The president still was suffering from a cold that he contracted early in the winter, but it was said it was not serious enough to make him break engagements he had made many weeks ago.

In New York the president will be the guest over night of his brother, Henry W. Taft, and will attend three dinners and one ball, but his political advisers are less interested in this part of the trip than they are in his first visit to Ohio since the Cincinnati elections last November. The president will spend three days in his home state; make more than a dozen speeches and probably see many of the political leaders. He will not talk about any of his political opponents, it was said, but may review the achievements of his administration.

The president is scheduled to reach New York about six o'clock tonight. He will attend the annual banquet of the Ohio society and "look in" on those of the West Virginia society and the Aero Club of America, and will then visit the annual ball of the Home of Daughters of Jacob of New York City.

Leaving New York tomorrow night, the president will reach Cleveland on Monday about noon. His engagements there include luncheon with the Chamber of Commerce, an afternoon with former Governor Herrick, a reception to the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers late in the afternoon. On his way to the McKinley day banquet of the Tippecanoe club, where he will be the principal speaker, the president will visit the students of the Cleveland Law school, and after the dinner will look in on that of the Hungarian Citizens.

His first engagement in Columbus on Tuesday will be a reception. His program there includes luncheon with the Chamber of Commerce, dedication of the new federal building, and the McKinley day banquet of the Columbus Glee club. He will spend the night in Columbus and Wednesday morning will meet the Republican editors, and after visiting the constitutional convention will leave about noon for Akron. In Akron he will attend the banquet of the Chamber of Commerce and leave for Washington shortly before midnight.

SCHOOLBOY SHOT

Racial War May End in Murder of Colored Lad.

Indianapolis, Ind., Jan. 27.—Trouble between the white and colored pupils of public school No. 25 culminated in the possible murder of Harry Payne, eleven years old, and colored.

He was on his way to school, when Robert Stevenson, a white boy about the same age, met him, and, flourishing a paper in the colored boy's face, put a small rifle against his abdomen and fired.

The bullet passed through the lad's body and he sank to the ground unconscious. The Stevenson boy disappeared. Physicians say the Payne boy cannot live.

LIVES AFTER SHOCK

30,000 Volts of Electricity Didn't Kill Lineman.

Wichita, Kan., Jan. 27. — William Toles, of Wichita, a Lineman, is alive after a 30,000 volt current of electricity had passed through his body at Valley Centre.

Toles was on a pole making a repair on an interurban line, when a chain thrown over the wire by a companion swung against him. The pole strap kept him from falling and he hung unconscious. He was revived soon after being rescued, and aside from his burns is not severely injured.

Russia and Germany Swap Spies.

Berlin, Jan. 27. — Russia and Germany swapped spies. The Kaiser requested the czar to pardon Captain Werner von Steiner, who was recently convicted at Warsaw of espionage and sentenced to three years' imprisonment. The czar granted the request, and the German emperor in turn released Baron Vinogradov, a Russian naval lieutenant, who was condemned at Leipzig recently to three years' imprisonment for a similar offense.

Maine Hero May Be Bishop.

New York, Jan. 27.—An unconfirmed report has it that Rev. John P. Childwick, who was chaplain of the battleship Maine when it was destroyed in Havana harbor, is to be made bishop of San Francisco. Father Childwick is president of St. Joseph's seminary, at Dunwoodie, this state. It is understood the appointment to the vacant bishopric was brought from Rome by Cardinal Farley.

ECUADORIANS LYNCH ONCE POPULAR IDOL

General Montero Shot, Beheaded and Burned.

Guayaquil, Ecuador, Jan. 27. — General Pedro Montero, who a few days ago was a popular hero here, and who at one time last November was proclaimed president by his troops, was shot to death here by an angry mob, who afterwards dragged the body through the streets, chopped the head off and then started a fire, into which they threw the head and trunk.

General Montero, who refused the presidency when nominated by the troops, turned the leadership of the provincial government over to General Flavio Alfaro and took the field at the head of one body of revolutionary troops.

He was successful for a while and was hailed as a great man by the people of Guayaquil. His forces were recently defeated by the government troops and Montero and several other generals were captured.

They were ordered tried by court-martial, and Montero's case was the first to be called. The court-martial sentenced him to sixteen years' imprisonment. This aroused the greatest indignation on the part of the populace, who had clamored for a death sentence. They rushed into the court room and riddled the general with bullets, seized his body and dragged it into the open air. There they hacked the head off, got fuel with which they started a fire and cast the head and trunk into the flames.

DOGS CONVICT BARN BURNER

Bloodhound Trained Him From Burned Building to His Home.

Franklin, Pa., Jan. 27.—Lowry Hoffman, a Venango county farmer, was convicted of burning his brother's live stock and barn last August.

One of the most damning features of the evidence against the accused related to a bloodhound following a scent from the burned building to the defendant's home.

Judge George S. Criswell told the jury he could find no case in Pennsylvania where this question had been passed on, but that courts in other states were inclined to admit it.

Hoffman is alleged to have burned the barn in revenge for the brother's sons testifying against him in a cider stealing prank.

MORGAN TO BRING ART RICHES HERE

Now in Europe to Transfer His Treasures.

TO LET PEOPLE SEE THEM

Financier's Valuable Collection From Abroad Will Be Loaned to Museums in This Country.

New York, Jan. 27.—J. P. Morgan is going to bring back from Europe the greater part of his art treasures which are now loaned to museums in Great Britain and on the continent, in addition to those now in his London house.

The movement of the things follows Mr. Morgan's decision to bring back to his own country practically all of his art possessions in order that people here may see them.

J. P. Morgan, Jr., was asked to comment upon the statement in the London Times that his father had determined to bring over the collection, which has been loaned to the South Kensington Museum, because of dissatisfaction with the treatment given to the collection at the museum. Mr. Morgan, Jr., issued the following memorandum on the affair:

"In reply to inquiries, J. P. Morgan, Jr., stated that the report that Mr. Morgan was bringing over a large part of his collections to this side was true, but that the statement in the London Times that it was being done because of dissatisfaction with the manner in which the collections had been treated, or with any resentment against the authorities in England, was entirely incorrect. Mr. Morgan was perfectly satisfied with the care and attention which the English museums had given to his collections, but very naturally has for a long time desired to have his collections in America."

Mr. Morgan, Jr., was asked whether his father intended to bring to America only those objects gathered at the South Kensington Museum or other collections.

"As I understand it," replied Mr. Morgan, Jr., "it is a general movement. Mr. Morgan has decided to bring back to this country all of his collections, or practically all of them. Those things in the South Kensington Museum simply are coming first. The collections in his London house are coming over, too, as are some collections now at Glasgow. Everything will be brought over in time. I don't know exactly what there is at South Kensington now, but as I recollect there are some bronzes, some pictures, jewels, ivories and cut crystals. I understand that the bronzes will be sent over before anything else."

Mr. Morgan, Jr., was further asked whether his father had at present any collections out on loan at museums on the continent and whether they would likewise be brought back to the United States.

"Yes; there are some collections on the continent, I think," said Mr. Morgan, Jr. "They will be brought back also, the same as the collections now in Great Britain. Mr. Morgan's motive in bringing the collections back is to let the people in this country see them. I assume that after the things get here they will be loaned to museums in the regular way and exhibited. That is his purpose in recalling them—to let people here see them. And Mr. Morgan will eventually bring back all of his various collections, or practically all of them."

HUNTER KILLED BY WOLVES

His Body and Two Dogs Partly Eaten by Animals.

Eagle River, Mich., Jan. 27. — The story of a desperate, but unavailing, battle for life was told by the finding of a hunter, five miles from Lake Superior, of the bodies of a hunter and his two dogs, evidently killed and partly eaten by wolves.

The body was so torn that there was nothing to identify the unfortunate hunter, but before succumbing to his assailants he and his dogs had evidently battled to the last, for four dead wolves lay around the victims. One dog was found close to its master, with its teeth locked in the throat of a wolf it had killed.

ASSAILS POWER OF "MONEY TRUST"

Philadelphian Says Many Bankers Are in Peonage.

Washington, Jan. 27.—The house committee on rules resumed its hearings on the Lindbergh resolution for a special inquiry into the "money trust," with Samuel Untermyer, of New York, as a witness.

Mr. Untermyer said he did not appear as sponsor or champion of the Lindbergh resolution, but he was satisfied congress could not legislate intelligently with respect to trusts or to a monetary system until the question of concentration of the "money power" was thoroughly understood.

For that reason, he said, he favored the proposed investigation, providing it was "conducted in a conservative, systematic, painstaking, non-partisan spirit, with the sole object of exposing the weaknesses and abuses of the system and as the basis for constructive legislation."

Mr. Untermyer stated that there was no such thing as a "money trust" in the sense that the word "trust" is applied to illegal combinations. He believed the proposed investigation would establish that the present financial condition was due to the concentration of funds of great corporations in New York city.

Emilen Hare Miller, of Philadelphia, followed Mr. Untermyer. He referred to J. P. Morgan & Co., Kuhn, Loeb & Co., the National City bank, of New York, and similar institutions as "the dominant financial powers." He declared that the financial condition of the country was not new; that he believed it unlawful and that no new methods were necessary for its remedy.

"There are a great many private bankers under restraint of the money combination," said Mr. Miller. "They know if they do anything independent they will be marked with a sort of 'All Baha' cross, by which the interests will know them. In Chicago 90 per cent of the private bankers are practically in a state of peonage. In other cities I find many banks among the officers of which are men directly identified with Wall street interests."

Crank Wanted to See Taft.

Washington, Jan. 27.—Patrick Barrett, who said he came from New York, was arrested at the entrance to the White House offices, after he had made the statement that he was Jesus Christ. He demanded the opportunity to talk religion with the president, but a secret service agent led the visitor to police headquarters for an examination.

CHAPTER XXV.

Letty Lane Runs Away.

He had not got upstairs to his rooms at the Carlton before a note was handed him from the actress, bidding him to return at once to the Savoy, and Ruggles, his heart hammering like a trip hammer, rushed up to his rooms, made an evening toilet, for

"Why, You Don't Mean to Say That You Thought I Wouldn't Stand by Him?"

It was then half-past seven, threw his cravats and collars all around the place, cursed like a miner as he got into his clothes, and red almost to apoplexy, nervous and full of emotion, he returned to the rooms he had left not three hours before.

The three hours had been busy ones at the actress' apartment. Letty Lane's sitting-room was full of trunks, dressing bags and traveling paraphernalia. She came forward out of what seemed a world of confusion, dressed as though for a journey, even her veil and her gloves denoting her departure. She spoke hurriedly and almost without politeness.

"I have sent for you to come and see me here. Not a soul in London knows I am going away. There will be a dreadful row at the theater, but that's none of your affair. Now, I want you to tell me before I go just what you are going to do for Dan."

"Who are you going with?" Ruggles asked shortly, and she flashed at him: "Well, really, I don't think that is any of your business. When you drive a woman as you have driven me, she will go far."

He interrupted her vehemently, not daring to take her hand. "I couldn't do more. I have asked you to marry me. I couldn't do more. I stand by what I have said. Will you?" he stammered.

She knew men. She looked at him keenly. Her veil was lifted above her eyes and his shadow framed her small pale face on which there were marks of utter disenchantment, of great ennui. She said languidly: "What I want to know is, what you are going to do for Dan?"

"I told you I would share with him."

"Then he will be nearly as rich?"

"He'll have more than is good for him."

That satisfied her. Then she pursued, "I want you to stand by him. He will need you."

Ruggles lifted the hand he held and kissed it reverently. "I'll do anything you say—anything you say."

Downstairs in the Savoy, as Dan had waited countless times, Ruggles waited until he saw her motor car carry her and her small luggage and Higgins away.

In their sitting-room in the Carlton a half-hour later the door was thrown open and Dan Blair came in like a madman. Without preamble he seized Ruggles by the arm.

"Look here," he cried, "what have you been doing? Tell me now, and tell me the truth, or, by God, I don't know what I'll do. You went to the Savoy. You went there twice. Anyhow, where is she?"

Dan, slender as he was beside Ruggles' great frame, shook the elder man as though he had been a terrier. "Speak to me. Where has she gone?" He stared in the Westerner's face, his eyes bloodshot. "Why in thunder don't you say something?"

And Ruggles prayed for some power to unloose his thickening tongue.

"You say she's gone?" he questioned.

"I say," said the boy, "that you've been meddling in my affairs with the woman I love. I don't know what you have said to her, but it's only your age that keeps me from striking you. Don't you know?" he cried, "that you are spoiling my life? Don't you know that?" A torrent of feeling coming to his lips, his eyes suffused, the tears rolled down his face. He walked away into his own room, remained there a few moments, and when he came out again he carried in his hand his valise, which he put down with a bang on the table. More calmly, but still in great anger, he said to his father's friend:

"Now, can you tell me what you've done or not?"

"Dan," said Ruggles with difficulty, "if you will sit down a moment we can—"

The boy laughed in his face. "Sit down!" he cried. "Why, I think you must have lost your reason. I have chartered a motor car out there and the damned thing has burst a tire and they are fixing it up for me. It will be ready in about two minutes and then I am going to follow wherever she has gone. She crossed to Paris, but I can get there before she can even with this damned accident. But, before I go, I want you to tell me what you said."

"Why," said Ruggles quietly, "I told her you were poor, and she turned you down."

His words were faint.

"God!" said the boy under his breath. "That's the way you think about truth. Lie to a woman to save my precious soul! But I expect," he said, "you think she is so immoral and so bad that she will hurt me. Well," he said, with great emphasis, "she has never done anything in her life that comes up to what you've done. Never! And nothing has ever hurt me so."

His lips trembled. "I have lost my respect for you, for my father's friend, and as far as she is concerned, I don't care what she marries me for. She has got to marry me, and if she doesn't"—he had no idea, in his passion, what he was saying or how—"why, I think I'll kill you first and then blow my own brains out!" And with these mad words he grabbed up his valise and bolted from the room, and Ruggles could hear his running feet tearing down the corridor.

CHAPTER XXVI.

White and Coral.

Spring in Paris, which comes in a fashion so divine that even the most calloused and indifferent are impressed by its beauty, awakened no answering response in the heart of the young man who, from his hotel window, looked out on the deserted gardens of the Tuileries—on the distant spires of churches whose names he did not know—on the square block of old palaces. He had missed the boat across the channel taken by Letty Lane, and the delay had made him lose what little trace of her he had. In the early hours of the morning he had flung himself in at the St. James, taken the indifferent room they could give him in the crowded season, and excited as he was slept and did not waken until noon. Blair thought it would be a matter of a few hours only to find the whereabouts of the celebrated actress, but it was not such an easy job. He had not guessed that she might be traveling incognito and at none of the hotels could he hear news of her, nor did he pass her in the crowded, noisy, rustling, crying streets, though he searched motors for her with eager eyes, and haunted restaurants and cafes, and went everywhere that he thought she might be likely to be.

At the end of the third day, unsuccessful and in despair, having hardly slept and scarcely eaten, the unhappy young lover found himself taking a slight luncheon in the little restaurant known as the Perouse down on the Quais. His head on his hand, for the present moment the joy of life gone from him, he looked out through the windows at the Seine, at the bridge and the lines of flowering trees. He was the only occupant of the upper room where, of late, he had ordered his luncheon.

The tide of life rolled slowly in this quieter part of the city, and as Blair sat there under the window there passed a piper playing a shrill, sweet tune. It was so different from any of the loud metropolitan clamors, with which his ears were full, that he got up, walked to the window and leaned out. It was a pastoral that met his eyes. A man piping, followed by little pattering goats; the primitive, unlooked-for picture caught his tired attention, and, just then, opposite the Quais, two women passed—flower sellers, their baskets bright with crocuses and groffles. The bright picture touched him and something of the spring-like beauty that the day wore and that dwelt in the May light, soothed him as nothing had for many hours.

He paid his bill, took courage, picked up his hat and gloves and stick and walked out briskly, crossing the bridge to the Rue de Rivoli, determined that night should not fail until he found the woman he sought. Nor did it, though the afternoon wore on and Dan, pursuing his old trails, wandered from worldly meeting place to worldly meeting place. Finally, toward six o'clock, he saw the lengthening shadows steal into the woods of the Bois de Boulogne, and in one of the smaller alleys, where the green-trunked trees of the forests were full of purple shadows and yellow sun discs, flickering down, he picked up a small iron chair and sat himself down, with a long sigh, to rest.

While he sat there watching the end of the alley as it gave out into the broader road, a beautiful red motor rolled up to the conjunction of the two ways and Letty Lane, in a summer frock, got out alone. She had a flowing white veil around her head and a flowing white scarf around her shoulders. As the day on the Thames, she was all in white—like a dove. But this time her costume was made vivid and picturesque by the coral parasol she carried, a pair of coral-colored kid shoes, around her neck and falling on their long chain, she wore his coral beads. He saw that he observed her face before she did him. All this Dan saw before he dashed into the road, came up to her with something like a cry on his lips, bareheaded, for his hat and his stick and his gloves were by his chair in the woods.

Letty Lane's hands went to her heart and her face took on a deadly pallor. She did not seem glad to see him. Out of his passionate description of the hours that he had been through, of how he had looked for her, of what he thought and wanted and felt, the actress made what she could, listening to him as they both stood there under the shadows of the green trees. Scanning her face for some sign that she loved him, for it was all he cared for, Dan saw no such indication there. He finished with:

"You know what Ruggles told you was a lie. Of course, I've got money enough to give you everything you want. He's a lunatic and ought to be shut up."

"It may have been a lie, all right," she said with forced indifference; "I've had time to think it over. You are too young. You don't know what you want." She stopped his protestations: "Well, then, I am too old and I don't want to be tied down."

When he pressed her to tell him whether or not she had ceased to care for him, she shook her head slowly, marking on the ground fine tracery with the end of her coral parasol. He had been obliged to take her back to the red motor, but before they were in earshot of her servants, he said:

"Now, you know just what you have done to me, you and Ruggles between you. For my father's sake and the thing I believed in I've kept pretty straight as things go." He nodded at her with boyish egotism, throwing all the blame on her. "I want you to understand that from now, right now, I'm going to the dogs just as fast as I can get there, and it won't be a very gratifying result to anybody that ever cared."

She saw the determination on his fine young face, worn by his sleepless nights, already matured and changed, and she believed him.

"Paris," he nodded toward the gate of the woods which opened upon Paris, "is the place to begin in—right here. A man," he went on, and his lips trembled, "can only feel like this in his life. You know all the talk there is about young love and first love. Well, that's what I've got for you, and I'm going to turn it now—right now—into what older people warn men from, and do their best to prevent. I have seen enough of Paris," he went on, "these days I have been looking for you, to know where to go and what to do, and I am setting off for it now."

She touched his arm.

"No," she murmured. "No, boy, you are not going to do any such thing!"

This much from her was enough for him. He caught her hand and cried: "Then you marry me. What do we care for anybody else in the world?"

"Go back and get your hat and stick and gloves," she commanded, keeping down the tears.

"No, no, you come with me, Letty; I'm not going to let you run to your motor and escape me again."

"Go; I'll wait here," she promised.

"I give you my word."

As he snatched up the inanimate objects from the leaf-strewn ground where he had thrown them in despair, he thought how things can change in pale face on which there were marks of a quarter of an hour.

Jubilant to have overcome the fate which had tried to keep her hidden from him in Paris, he could hardly believe his eyes that she was before them again, and, as the motor rolled into the Avenue des Acacias, he asked her the question uppermost in his mind:

"Are you alone in Paris, Letty?"

"Don't you count?"

"No—no—honestly, you know what I mean."

"You haven't any right to ask me that."

"I have—I have. You gave me a right. You're engaged to me, aren't you? Gosh, you haven't forgotten, have you?"

"Don't make me conspicuous in the Bois, Dan," she said; "I only let you come with me because you were so terribly desperate, so ridiculous."

"Are you alone?" he persisted. "I have got to know."

"Higgins is with me."

"Oh, God," he cried wildly, "how can you joke with me? Don't you understand you're breaking my heart?"

But she did not dare to be kind to him, knowing it would unnerve her for the part she had promised to play.

He sat gripping his hands tightly together, his lips white. "When I leave you now," he said brokenly, "I am going to find that devil of a Hungarian and do him up. Then I am going to tackle Ruggles."

"Why, what's poor Mr. Ruggles got to do with it?"

Dan cried scornfully: "For God's sake, don't keep this up! You know the rot he told you! I made him confess. He has had this mania all along about money being a handicap; he was bent on trying this game with some girl to see how it worked." He continued more passionately. "I don't care a rap what you marry me for, Letty, or what you have done or been. I think you're perfect and I'll make you the happiest woman in the world."

She said: "Hush, hush. Listen, dear; listen, little boy. I am awfully sorry, but it won't do. I never thought it would. You'll get over it all right, though you don't, you can't believe me now. I can't be poor, you know; I really couldn't be poor."

He interrupted roughly: "Who says you'll be? What are you talking about? Why, I'll cover you with jewels, sweetheart, if I have to rip the earth open to get them out."

She understood that Dan believed Ruggles' story to have been a cock-and-bull one.

"You talk as though you could buy me, Dan. Wait, listen." She put him back from her. "Now, if you won't be quiet, I'm going to stop my car."

He repeated: "Tell me, are you alone in Paris?" Tell me, for three days I have wandered and searched for you everywhere; I have hardly eaten a thing, I don't believe I have

sleep a wink." And he told her of his weary search.

She listened to him, part of the time her white-gloved hand giving itself up to the boy; part of the time both hands folded together and away from him, her arms crossed on her breast, her small shoes of coral kid tapping the floor of the car. Thus they rolled leisurely along the road by the Bois. "Are you alone in Paris, Letty?"

And she said: "Oh, what a bore you are! You're the most obstinate creature. Well, I am alone, but that has nothing to do with you."

A glorious light broke over his face; his relief was tremendous. "Oh, thank God!" he breathed. "Ponitowsky"—and she said his name with difficulty—"is coming tonight from Carlsbad."

The boy threw back his bright head and laughed wildly.

"Curse him! The very name makes me want to commit a crime. He will go over my body to you. You hear me, Letty. I mean what I say."

People had already remarked them as they passed. The actress was too well known to pass unobserved, but she was indifferent to their curiosity or to the existence of anyone but this excited boy.

Blair, who had not opened a paper since he came to Paris, did not know that Letty Lane's flight from London had created a scandal in the theatrical world, that to be seen with her driving in the Bois was a conspicuous thing indeed. She thought of it, however.

"I am going to tell the man to drive you to the gate on the other side of the park where it's quieter, we won't be stared at, and I want you to leave me and let me go to the Meurice alone. You must, Dan, you must let me go to the hotel alone."

He laughed again in the same strained fashion and forced her hand to remain in his.

"Look here. You don't suppose I am going to let you go like this, now that I have seen you again. You don't suppose I am going to give you up to that infamous scoundrel? You have got to marry me."

Bringing all her strength of character to bear, she exclaimed: "I expect you think you are the only person who has asked me to marry him, Dan. I am going to marry Prince Ponitowsky. He is perfectly crazy about me."

Until that moment she had not made him think that she was indifferent to him, and the idea that such a thing was possible, was too much for his overstrained heart to bear. Dan cried her name in a voice whose appeal was like a hurt creature's, and as the hurt creature in its suffering sometimes springs upon its torturer, he flung his arms around her as she sat in the motor, held her and kissed her, then set her free, and as the motor flew along, tore open the door to spring out or to throw himself out, but clinging to him she prevented his mad act. She stopped the car along the edge of the quiet, wooded alleys. Blair saw that he had terrified her. She covered her beating heart with her hands and gasped at him that he was "crazy, crazy," and perhaps a little late his dignity and self-possession returned.

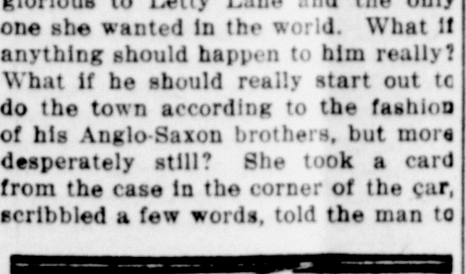

"I am mad," he acknowledged more calmly, "and I am sorry that I frightened you. But you drive me mad."

Without further word he got out and left her agitated, leaning toward him, and Blair, less pale and thoroughly the man, lifted his hat to her and, with unusual grace, bowed good-night and good-bye. Then, rushing as he had come, he walked off down through the alleys, his gray figure in his gray clothes disappearing through the vista of meeting trees.

For a moment she stared after him, her eyes fastened on the tall, slender, beautiful young man. Blair's fire and ardor, his fresh youthfulness, his protection and his chivalry, his ardent devotion, touched her profoundly. Tears fell, and one splashed on her white glove. Was he really going to ruin his life? The old ballad, "The Earl of Moray," ran through her head:

"And long may his lady look from the castle wall."

Dan had neither title nor, according to Ruggles, had he any money, and she could marry the prince; but Dan, as he walked so fast away, misery snapping at his heels as he went, stamping through the woods, seemed glorious to Letty Lane and the only one she wanted in the world. What if anything should happen to him really? What if he should really start out to do the town according to the fashion of his Anglo-Saxon brothers, but more desperately still? She took a card from the case in the corner of the car, scribbled a few words, told the man to drive around the curve and meet the outlet of the path by which Dan had gone. When she saw him within reaching distance she sent the chauffeur across the woods to give Mr. Blair her scribbled word and consoled herself with the belief that Dan wouldn't go to the dogs or throw himself in the river until he had seen her again.

"Are You Alone?" He Persisted, "I Have Got to Know."

Gov. Glasscock Says Colonel Won't Be a Candidate.

WON'T REFUSE NOMINATION

Chief Executive of West Virginia Declares State Is For Him and He Will Be Elected If Named by Republicans.

New York, Jan. 27.—"I think Colonel Roosevelt will never be a candidate, I think he will have to be nominated without being a candidate."

This declaration was made by Governor Glasscock, of West Virginia, after he had been the guest of Colonel Roosevelt at luncheon.

"Do you think Colonel Roosevelt will decline a nomination?" "No man has ever yet declined it," replied Governor Glasscock. "I am going back to West Virginia to work for Colonel Roosevelt and expect that West Virginia will send sixteen delegates for him to the Republican national convention."

It was reported that the West Virginia governor intended to put the question whether he would accept the Republican presidential nomination directly to the former occupant of the White House and that he would ask the colonel to make a definite answer. Whether he asked this all-important question and whether he got an answer that lent color to his statement that he did not believe Roosevelt would be a candidate for the nomination, Governor Glasscock refused to say.

It was also reported that Governor Glasscock was the bearer of a letter signed by himself and three or four other Republican governors, asking the colonel to come out with a flat-footed statement as to where he stood with regard to the presidency.

Before the luncheon Colonel Roosevelt was asked: "It is reported that Governor Glasscock is the bearer of a note signed by several other governors asking your position in regard to the nomination for the presidency?"

"I don't know of that at all," was the only reply that Roosevelt would make.

LONGWORTH CALLS ON TAFT

White House Conference Follows His Recent Visit to Roosevelt.

Washington, Jan. 27.—Representative Nicholas Longworth, recently returned from a visit to his father-in-law, Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, was a White House caller.

Mr. Longworth would not say whether he talked politics with the president or with the colonel. In some political circles the visit of Mr. Longworth to Oyster Bay was looked upon as Mr. Taft's sending an emissary to ascertain, if possible, where Colonel Roosevelt stood in the presidential mix-up. Mr. Longworth is said to oppose the entry of his father-in-law into the presidential arena because of the "third term" objection.

Following his return from Oyster Bay, Mr. Longworth did not appear to be pleased with the results of his visit. The only statement he would make to inquiries as to Mr. Roosevelt's attitude was:

"I will only say that I found that my distinguished father-in-law is thoroughly capable of speaking for himself, and must do so, as no one has been authorized to speak for him."

TAKES RAP AT WILSON

Dalzell Refers to Governor as "Expert Lightning Change Artist."

Washington, Jan. 27.—In the tariff debate Representative Dalzell, of Pennsylvania, called the "high priest of protection," took an incidental shot at Governor Woodrow Wilson, Democratic presidential possibility. He quoted from an article in the North American Review in which Wilson attacked the method of making tariff bills in committee rooms and in party caucuses.

"That was written by Woodrow Wilson when he was president of Princeton," said Representative Dalzell. "That is what he thought then. What he thinks now I do not know, since he has in the meantime become distinguished as the most expert lightning change artist who, by his antics, ever contributed to the joy of political vanderville."

Roosevelt Club in Arizona.

Phoenix, Ariz., Jan. 27.—Joseph Kibbey, former territorial governor, and Dwight B. Heard, two leaders of the progressive wing of the Republican party in the new state, launched a Roosevelt club. Members of the club are pledged to "use all honorable means" to bring about the nomination of the former president.

Kills His Wife and Himself.

Huntington, W. Va., Jan. 27.—Harry Kilpatrick, twenty-five years old, shot and instantly killed his wife and then committed suicide by shooting himself. The double tragedy is said to have resulted from the refusal of his wife to withdraw a suit for divorce.

Gold Dusted by Dog Team.

Seward, Alaska, Jan. 27.—A ton of iditarod gold dust arrived over the trail by dog team enroute to Seattle.

Safe Remedy Ends

Catarrh Miseries

Gives Instant Relief, Cures and

Prevents Catarrh and Cold in the Head.

The quickest, best and safest way to cure catarrh or a cold in the head is by using a remedy that will "touch the spot" and do its work quickly without leaving any bad effects. Ely's Cream Balm, which is applied to the nostrils or rubbed on the throat or chest gets right at the root of the trouble and instantly relieves even the worst case of catarrh or cold. A few minutes after applied you can feel a loosening up in the head, the pain and soreness are gone, the sense of taste, smell and hearing come back, and you feel like a different person.

Ely's Cream Balm cleanses, heals and strengthens the inflamed membranes, takes away that stuffed up feeling and dull pain in the head, relieves the throat soreness and stops the nasty discharge which is the cause of the disgusting hawking, spitting, blowing of the nose, and foul breath. May fever victims who are made miserable by fits of sneezing, coughing and wheezing get instant and permanent relief by the use of this simple remedy.

Don't suffer another minute. Ely's

Cream Balm will relieve you immediately, and a 50 cent bottle will more than likely work a complete cure. All druggists sell it. People's Drug Store special agent for

Sage Tea Will

Darken The Hair

Restore Faded and Gray Hair to Natural

Color—Dandruff Quickly Removed.

There is nothing new about the idea of using Sage for restoring the color of the hair. Our grandmothers kept their hair dark, glossy and abundant by the use of a simple "Sage Tea." Whenever their hair fell out or took on a dull, faded or streaked appearance, they made a brew of Sage leaves, and applied it to their hair with wonderfully beneficial effect.

Nowadays we don't have to resort to the old-time tiresome method of gathering the herbs and making the tea. This is done by skillful chemists better than we could do it ourselves; and all we have to do is to call for the ready-made product, Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair

Remedy, containing Sage in the proper strength, with the addition of Sulphur, another old-time scalp remedy.

This preparation gives youthful color and beauty to the hair, and is one of the best remedies you can use for dandruff, dry, feverish, itching scalp, and falling hair. Get a fifty cent bottle from your druggist today, and you will be surprised at the quick results. All druggists sell it, under guarantee that the money will be refunded if the remedy is not exactly as represented. People's Drug Store, Special

WANTED KNOX ON BENCH

Reported Taft Offered Appointment

First to Secretary of State.

Washington, Jan. 27.—It was reliably reported here that President

Taft, before considering any other candidates, had offered to Secretary of State Knox an appointment to the supreme court bench to succeed the late Justice Harlan.

Circuit Judge W. C. Hook still is supposed to be the leading candidate considered by the president at this time. The delay in announcing a choice has given rise to renewed rumor that Secretary of Commerce and Labor Nagel may finally be selected.

INSURGENTS MAY

SUPPORT STEEL BILL

Are Expected to Take Favorable Action.

Washington, Jan. 27.—Twenty-five

Republican insurgent representatives met to decide whether or not they would support the pending Democratic bill proposing a revision of the iron and steel schedule of the Payne-Aldrich tariff law.

The sense of the meeting was that the Underwood bill provided for revision downward and therefore should have the support of progressive Republicans.

While a final decision was not reached by the insurgents, the informal announcement was made to the effect that practically every member of the group would support the iron and steel bill, as well as the other tariff measures that will be reported to the house by Representative Underwood and his Democratic associates on the committee on ways and means.

The importance of the attitude of the house insurgents lies in the fact that it probably foreshadows a similar intention on the part of the LaPolette following in the senate, in which event the Democratic steel revision

bill will be put up to the president.

MINERS MEET OPERATORS

Wage Question Comes Up For Joint

Discussion.

Indianapolis, Ind., Jan. 27.—Bituminous coal miners and operators of Indiana, Illinois, Ohio and western Pennsylvania met in joint conference behind closed doors to discuss a wage scale to go into effect April 1, 1912, when the present contract expires.

The demands, which the miners took to the operators, call for a two-year contract, with increases in wages of 10 cents a ton on a mine run basis, and for a 20 per cent increase for day labor about the mines. The miners also demand a seven-hour day.

Airman Falls 100 Feet.

Los Angeles, Cal., Jan. 27.—Frank

Stiles, an aviator, fell 100 feet in an aeroplane and was seriously injured.

Stiles was "warming up" for the day's program at Dominguez.

Look Out For Frozen Beets.

Last year considerable loss came to stock owners in Wisconsin by feeding frozen beets, says Hoard's Dairyman.

In one instance a farmer boiled up a lot of such beets and fed his hogs. Almost the entire lot died in a short time of paralysis of the heart, occasioned

it is supposed, by serious gastric disturbance. The chemical changes caused by freezing and thawing evolve a poisonous principle. Dr. Hadley of the veterinary department of the Wisconsin College of Agriculture has been making an investigation of these facts, and his conclusions are as we have stated.

Cows in Cold Weather.

Cows will do as well or better in cold weather than in warm weather if they have good feed and shelter. Milk and butter bring higher prices at this season, and it is easier to keep the product fresh.

California is making rapid strides to the front as a dairy state. In 1898 the annual butter output of the state was 24,000,000 pounds. In 1910 the production was 60,000,000, and it is contended the gain has been due chiefly to the greatly increased production of alfalfa in the Sacramento and San Joaquin valleys, where six tons per acre is a common yield in a single season.

HARRISBURG AUTOMOBILE SHOW

The third annual Harrisburg automobile show will be held in the big

Arena building in that city from February 2 to 10 inclusive and promises to be the greatest display of its kind ever held in this section of the country.

Every inch of available space has been sold for exhibition purposes, and many applications for space had to be refused.

Twenty five different makes of pleasure and commercial cars will be shown in the big auditorium and in addition there will be special shows in the sales rooms of the automobile dealers in the city and several factories who have been unable to secure space will have side walk exhibits. In addition to the cars on display, there will be the greatest line of accessories ever shown. In the accessory line there will be novelties that have never before been shown outside of the large cities and the importance of the Harrisburg show is evidenced by the fact that all the metropolitan motor magazines will have exhibits and men on the floor.

A big feature of the show will be a display of motor cycles, four of the best machines in the country being represented. Each day there will be prizes given away, and a big fea-ure will be moving pictures showing automobile races and automobile scenes.

The cars to be shown on the floor are:

American, White, Pullman, Chalmers,

E. M. F., Flangers, Oldsmobile, Velie,

Overland, Hupmobile, National,

Reo, Abbott Detroit, Mack, Kline Kar,

Case, Hudson, Inter-Stats, R. C. H.,
